Helpful Hints for MLA Style

- When citing in the text, include the author and page number (Johnson 66).
- When citing an online source in the text of your research paper, list the paragraph number instead of the page number. (Halverson para. 18) or (Halverson ¶ 18) would be used to cite the eighteenth paragraph. To find the ¶ symbol in Microsoft Word, click on Insert, then Symbol.
- Every citation contains medium of publication descriptor. These will most often be Print or Web, but others include TV or DVD. In most cases these will appear at the end of the citation, though for Web sources they appear before the date accessed.
- If there are two or three authors, reverse only the name of the first author, add a comma, and give the other names in normal form: Mathers, Jerry, Tony Dow, and Ken Osmond.
- If there are more than three authors, you may only use the first name and add et al.
- The heading Works Cited should appear at the top of your list.
- If an entry runs more than one line, indent the subsequent lines five spaces from the left margin.
- All entries should be double-spaced, unless instructed otherwise.
- Entries should be in alphabetical order by author's last name.
